

The new european wars and their new praetorian guards

Unable to prevent its self-destruction process, that has reached the final stage, the European Union ambiguously wants to increase its armed forces, since 2024, under the pretext of protecting itself from Russia, but in reality for trying to maintain its illegitimate internal political order. Because these armed forces, even inflated in number, have nothing to seriously oppose the Russian army. They would be immediately and completely destroyed at the very beginning of an offensive.

The rulers of the European Union are therefore trying to strengthen in extremis their perverse socio-political grip, by artificially assembling a protective apparatus against a falsely presented common threat. Indeed, the main external threat does not come from the east (Russia), it comes from the west (USA), and the internal threat is both intra-European (pre-eminence conflicts) and intra-national (civil wars).

This implies that the pretext of preparing common armed forces for an hypothetical fight against Russia is illusory, and that the cooperation of European national means for a common defense is virtually impossible. Because the USA is already openly undermining the cohesion and means of action of the European Union, whose leaders have been too much discredited by themselves to be able to oppose the plutocracy that organizes all this.

In these conditions, despite the maneuvers of their bad leaders, the main European countries will enter into a process of reciprocal competition, everyone for itself, potentially carrier of clashes for pre-eminence. And there, their new official armed forces, recreated with bits and pieces, will no longer accept so easily being commanded by failed politicians and officials, discredited, co-responsible for the general disaster. Despite everything, in several countries, part of these forces could temporarily constitute a praetorian guard (neo-SS), intended to protect the failed rulers, as much against popular resentment as against the preeminent ambitions of their competitors neighbors.

And this popular resentment can once again be diverted and manipulated. Because the general collapse of Europe (political, economic, industrial, financial, social, cultural, civic, etc.) is intrinsically carrier of a violence that risks lighting the fires of a strong civil war in most States, where the main internal enemies cannot be logically other than non-integrated extra-european immigrants, especially Muslim.

The socio-political reconstruction of these states risks therefore being carried out to the detriment of these immigrants, who were manipulated beforehand to oppose frontally the native-born European populations. And the many defeated Ukrainian neo-Nazis who will return to Western Europe to pour out their bitter frustration will also add a strong potential of violence. But even if the near future is dark, it will still be necessary to rebuild each country afterwards to avoid such misfortunes recurring, and European eco-humanists will have to contribute to this as best as they can. They are capable of it.

MC

next article